*Locating the (Transnational)
Politics of "Men": Activism,
Policy, Theorising*

"Men" as a gendered category is now on many social, cultural and political agendas. How this has been framed has changed markedly over the last 40 years in many parts of the world. In this session I examine some of these changes, along with the complex relations between the diverse politics of men's gender-conscious activism, the development of explicitly gendered policy-making on men, and the establishment of the sub-field of critical studies on men and masculinities. In the last of these arenas a crucial issue is to what extent and in what ways studies on men and masculinities are critical, or not, and how they relate to wider feminist and gender debates and theorising.

Jeff Hearn is Guest Faculty Research Professor, based in Gender Studies, Örebro University, Sweden, Professor of Management and Organisation, Hanken School of Economics, Finland, and Professor of Sociology, University of Huddersfield. An Academician in the Social Sciences, he was formerly Research Professor in the Social Sciences, Manchester University. Among his recent books are Managers Talk about Gender (2009, Edita), Sex, Violence and the Body (2010), Men and Masculinities Worldwide (2011, both Palgrave Macmillan), The Limits of Gendered Citizenship (2011, Routledge), Rethinking Transnational Men (Routledge, 2013), and Men of the World (Sage, 2015).
