

TODAY TALKS

Right to Education: A Secular Curriculum?

As a crucial topic which is prone to manipulation by governments, formal education has always been a significant aspect of governance throughout the past century. Even though the so-called modernization of the world suggests otherwise, it is still questionable if the methods of education has improved or not. Under the light of rapidly changing curriculum and examination patterns in Turkey, the secular approach is said to be diverging from its focus and students are being subjected to experimental trials that is said to limit their competitive skills in international education quality indexes.

This week's TODAY TALKS will take place on October 17th after a long summer. From sociological, historical, and political points of views, we will discuss how education has been shaped according to ruling ideologies and was taken out of its purposes.
